HACCP AUSTRALIA PROVIDES ON-LINE TRAINING OPTIONS

Training is a key part of any food safety risk management system and is increasingly mandated by regulatory authorities across Australia. The Food Standards Code requires that persons handling food have the appropriate skills and knowledge to be able to carry out their work and maintain a high degree of safety for the consumer. The state food authorities have made this requirement mandatory and are most commonly legislated through the Food Safety Supervisor (FSS) initiative. In NSW for example, all retail and food service food businesses must have a trained and certified FSS by October 2011. Failure to meet these legislated requirements will result in prosecutions.

Whilst few arguments exist against the benefits of training, the requirements can be onerous on a business and the individual. Lost days from work, travel, inflexible times and other drawbacks of classroom style training are valid criticisms often levelled against traditional face to face training providers. For a business with multiple sites and high turnover or seasonality, these issues can become a major drawback and expense consideration.

HACCP Australia has addressed these issues through the launch of a range of on-line training options. Partnering with an experienced RTO and outstanding IT experts, meeting the requirements of Food Safety Supervisor training is just a click away. The courses meet all legislative requirements and are nationally recognised training units providing cost effective solutions to the food industry. No need to travel and the ability to bookmark and work at your own pace are some of the benefits that make these courses the preferred option for many in the food industry.

HACCP Australia Director, Martin Stone, says, "We have long strived to provide the most cost effective and user-friendly solutions to the food industry and our on-line courses really deliver these objectives. To access the courses and enrol, all you need is a credit card and a PC. You can be starting the course almost immediately and complete it at a timeframe that suits you".
